"Iglomat"

Has it really taken so long?

This is an epic saga of stolen prams, casio keyboards, trans-American expressways, covert product placement and serious email tomfoolery. Following months, nay years, of writing, twiddling and general sonic invention, Iglomat are finally ready to unleash 'Iglomat', their long-awaited debut long player, onto the listening public.

Iglomat is the latest project from world renowned producer, composer and DJ, David Jack. Joining him on this new musical venture is Austin based guitarist/photographer Sandy Carson and long time collaborator Scott MacDonald.

David has previously released three highly acclaimed albums under his own moniker and his hip-hop based spy breaks and samples were much loved by the late John Peel.

The album has been described as electronic based post rock. The band uses live instrumentation just as much as Jack's more usual cut up bleeps and beats.

The video for 'Dial Wookie', the new single, is directed by one of the worlds foremost BMX and Skate video producers, Mike Manzoori, and has been widely screened across MTV channels in the UK and Europe.

Iglomat will be appearing live at this years' SXSW festival in Austin, Texas with more dates to be announced in the immediate future.

It's tight, slick, over too quick, broad, ballsy, dark with energy, flushed from its own dangerous heat—like a leather-clad Barry Sheene.- Power House Magazine

TORNADIC ACTIVITY - The sound a pensioner hears moments before death. What is that noise! I've wasted my life! Is that you Jesus? Has a bassline Bootsy Collins would rape for. Watch out lads hes behind you! Spoiled slightly by TV on in background. Isnt that always the way with dead pensioners. No singing. – El fajio
